verified, nor has he heard from him, nor does he know where he is. After the petition was filed Mr. Hekeler should have received from the Clerk of the Chancery Court a citation accompanied by a certified copy of the petition so that he might hand them to the proper sheriff for service. However, he has never received these papers though he has received a receipt for the filing fee and his check has come back.

When some time had elapsed and Mr. Hekeler had heard nothing more from Riehl, he called up Mr. Payne and told him that there was nothing further for him to do in the matter and asked payment of his charges by either Riehl or Payne. He then received a check for a modest amount, substantially less than $250., from Payne, which he is quite sure was a Daily Mirror check. He did not send Payne a bill or a receipt, nor did any letter from Payne accompany the check.

Riehl, at his first interview with Mr. Hekeler, made statements which caused Mr. Hekeler to ask him why he did not sue his wife for a divorce and Riehl replied that while there were grounds for such suit he did not have the proof. Mr. Hekeler says that Riehl made a rather good appearance.
